Image: Roblox CorporationIf your kids ever wanted to design and animate their own video games but didn't know where to start, Roblox has a free summer charging challenge that can teach them the basics. The challenge, called Build, Play it, gives kids easy-to-follow instructions to help them learn how to create games with custom animations—and then gain levels in the game by moving in real life while using mobile devices. Roblox explains on his blog:This challenge is about movement, both in the game and in real life. We'll show you step by step how to make a game where players race around the track and get level by moving the IRL with their mobile devices. How does their avatar move? That's up to you. You will be able to build animation from scratch. Are they going to fly? Running backwards? Turning cartwheels? The possibility is unlimited as your imagination. To get started, kids need to download Roblox Studio, which is free for Mac or PC. (If they're completely new to Roblox, they'll also need to sign up for an account.) Next, they can choose one of three tutorials that match their animation experience and skill level (beginners, middle or advanced). Tutorials are full of illustrations, graphics and problem-solving notes for common issues, all of which will help children navigate the Studio and make their original animations. G/O Media can get a commissionBlitzWolf 10 LED Ring KitScreenshot: Roblox CorporationOnce animated them complete, children can submit them to the Winning animation Contest and Celebration through July 31, and Roblox favourites will be featured on the official Island of Mobile Games. Winners will be selected based on how creative their animation is, as well as whether it fits the festive theme and overall quality. Meet the smartest parents on Earth!
